

LIST OF THE BREEDING BIRDS OF ARABIA

(Please note this list, including the nomenclature and taxonomic order is under review and will be brought in line with that of the Atlas of the Breeding Birds of Arabia which was published in July 2010. Also the status notes do not in all cases reflect the up to date situation. This is also being reviewed).

The species listed here are those known to have bred in Arabia or are very likely to breed. The order follows the List of recent Holarctic bird species by K. H. Voous (published by the British Ornithologists Union, 1977) but certain changes have been made to bird names to accord with present usage. The reference number shown on the left is the number to be inserted in Column 2 of the ABBA Report sheet Form 3. The few breeding species not on the Voous list (these are mainly ferally breeding exotics) are given a separate sequence commencing with 2001.

The Breeding Evidence Code (BEC) used by the ABBA project should be read in conjunction with this list. Details of species additional to the list, for which breeding is proven (BEC 10 or higher), will be published in future issues of Phoenix. Observers suspecting or proving breeding of species not shown on the list should make a full report. Highly sedentary species are identified with an asterisk (*). Because presence of these species, even outside the breeding season, is a good indication of local breeding. BEC "XX" may be used to report occurrence in suitable habitat at any time. Atlasers should be aware that many species which breed also occur as visitors. Because of the possibility of confusion with migrants certain BEC's are irrelevant for a number of species, for example Codes 00 and 01 for the Hoopoe Upupa epops. This is because a Hoopoe can appear anywhere in Arabia as a migrant during the breeding season. BEC 03 should also be suspect because two birds associating together may be migrants or a breeding pair. Observers should also be aware that the breeding season of a species may vary in different parts of the peninsula, according to altitude or recent rainfall.
